Improving Patient Adherence

The cost of non-adherence is high—providers can turn the tide

Patient adherence is top priority for providers. But it's up to the patient to follow through on the care plan you've created. What will you do when they don't?

The Problem

Half of all patients don't adhere to the medication plans their providers prescribe. And when patients don't adhere, the results are devastating: those with chronic conditions like diabetes and hypertension double their risk of hospitalization.

As a provider, you're often just one of many providers your patients see and don't always have time to monitor how closely they stick to your medication plan. When you do check in beyond office visits, many will lie regarding their adherence. In fact, 83% of patients won't tell their providers when they plan not to fill a new prescription.

If you're working on increasing patient adherence to your medication plans, a private delivery pharmacy service partner could provide a solution.

The Solution

Private delivery pharmacy companies can work as an extension of the patient care team to facilitate care coordination, manage medication fills and refills, ensure safe and timely delivery, and provide proactive services to ensure a higher rate of adherence.

Here at AdhereRx, we specialize in treating patients with chronic conditions and complex medicine routines who are at the highest risk for hospitalizations and complications due to a lack of adherence. By focusing on patients with six or more medications or at least one prescription for multiple sclerosis, HIV/AIDS, rheumatoid arthritis, kidney failure, or a transplant, we're able to offer holistic care that provides assistance exactly when they need it.

And it works.

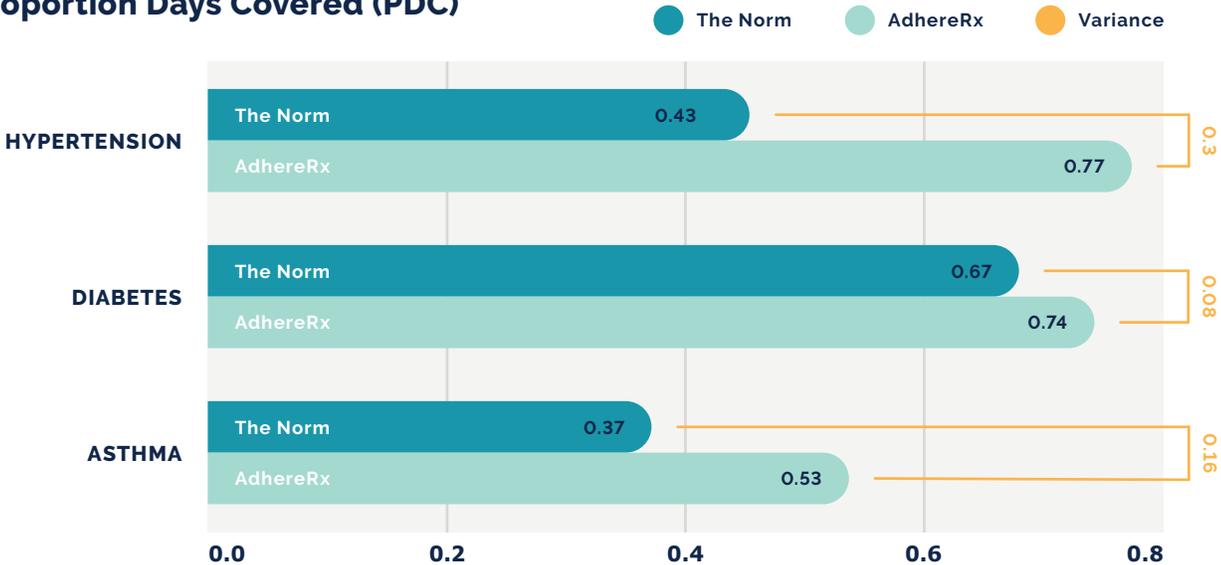

The Outcome

With 15 years of experience, we've seen improvements across the board in patients who chose an at-home delivery pharmacy service as compared to the general population.

Overall Increased Adherence

In one study evaluating hypertension, diabetes, and asthma medication adherence, AdhereRx adherence levels were higher than the market averages across all three.

Proportion Days Covered (PDC)

Decreased Discrepancies

Prescription discrepancies are common among patients with chronic conditions. Across AdhereRx patients,

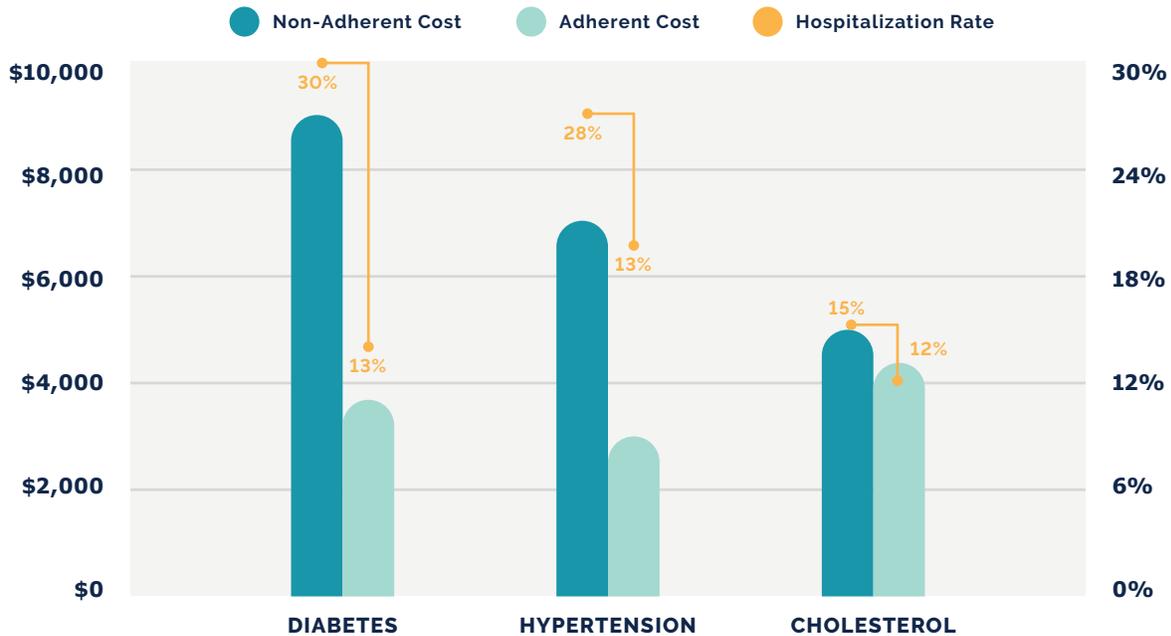

60% of patients

saw an increase in discrepancy identification, preventing further health and safety issues

Reduced Hospitalizations

Lack of adherence and unidentified discrepancies lead to hospitalization. AdhereRx saw a 57% reduction of patient hospitalizations due to increased adherence and discrepancy identification.
